Biltmore Forest Country Club recently celebrated its 100th anniversary, so it seemed like the perfect time to reinvigorate the club with a new swimming and tennis facility. It was combined with a state-of-the-art fitness center and athletic facility.

The desired expansion required approximately four times as much square footage as the original building, so a two-story structure was created. The upper floor was designed to appear as a half story with lower bearing heights. This reduces the visual height of the building so the main clubhouse can remain the focal point of the property.

The workout spaces on the upper floor have views of the golf course and distant mountains. The centrally located dining areas are accessible to swimmers, tennis players and fitness center users.

The complex is situated along the 11th fairway, so golfers can order food and drinks online or make selections from the grab-and-go section during their rounds.

The design of the athletic complex reflects the architecture of the 101-year-old clubhouse, with a matching slate roof and similar construction materials and color scheme. Meanwhile, the interiors of the swim, fitness and tennis buildings are of modern design with a bright color palette and abundant natural light.
